

After graduating from medical school at the University of Louisville School of Medicine, Dr. Majdalany completed Diagnostic Radiology and Vascular Interventional Radiology training at Brigham and Women's Hospital, Harvard Medical School. He served as an Assistant Professor at Ohio State University before being recruited to the University of Michigan as the IR Fellowship Director. He currently serves as an Associate Professor and as the IR Residency and Fellowship Program Director at Emory University. Clinical and research interests include advanced lymphatic interventions, superficial and deep venous disease, locoregional cancer therapy, and liver transplant/hepatobiliary interventions.